

CR James Reports

October 21, 2011 Issue

Hi Mr. James, I strongly believe we are blessed or cursed by circumstances, I also believe one can be denied success if attacked by a "binding force" Jesse Jackson had all the appealing qualities Barack Obama, did yet never got to be US. President, I believe it was a binding force. When I ran for local council, my campaign manager, never got a team together to help out on the campaign, because a binding force caused her to be indifferent so I'd lose, the local news station said I was the best speaker of all the candidates, yet I lost because I lacked enough media exposure to win, a binding force kept me in the shadows, a binding force caused certain people to label me a dark horse candidate, or a long shot, yet lots of long shots win. In may I met Madison, she flirted with me as much as I did her, there was a good rapport great chemistry, but binding forces caused her to decline when I ask her out, because she had such anxiety. Sometimes when I meet girls, that appear to like me they feel anxiety, and that anxiety hinders things, it's a binding force. So how does one conquer a binding force and succeed?

hope to hear from you soon John

Hey John

Interesting email. I never realized that you ran for "local council" that's pretty cool. All of your interesting questions in the past about charisma makes sense now.

As far as a "binding force" that caused her to decline going out, I would have to know exactly how you're defining (or specifically describing) a "binding force" as it relates to this situation.

I believe that when a woman declines to go out with a guy (or declines making any sort of intimate decision with him) it's based on LACK OF VALUE (from her perspective) - and that's based on a sum of "real life" reasons (from her perspective)...

Inner traits, physical traits, his beliefs, how he behaves, his past impact on her, his (perceived) future impact on her, a current situation, lack of time, level of income, (perceived) level of future income, how he makes decisions, her beliefs (real or unreal) about him or guys like him, her fears (rational or irrational) etc.

...and different women are going to be more concerned with certain things (reasons)...

If you're defining "binding force" abstractly, then yes there was a "binding force" that made her not want to go out with you.

To conquer it (for success) you have to first describe it differently.

You can say two things that generally mean the same thing, by one way implies more personal responsibility.

So if you say: "Alexis" didn't want to date me because of a reason, then youre

Jesse Jackson never became President based on a set of "reasons" (some he could control. some he couldn't.)

You're better off saying that it was based on a "list of reasons" why she didn't want to go out with it. If you place more emphasis on the confirmation of "not-wanting-to-go-with-you" and less emphasis on the appearance of "initial attraction", then the probability of constructing a superior game plan for future girls will increase.

Hey CR,

Thanks for the guidance. I think it's kind of dawned on me that maybe I am chasing too many ideas or tactics without a lot of success. I was thinking a new experience for her would start to make her crave things more but, any suggestions of anything sexual still creates an unhealthy negative reaction in her. Sex should be a fun and exciting topic.

And, even though I very infrequently talk or even joke about it, it is still too much for her. I believe there are two problems, how she views herself in a sexual context and even how she views me in a sexual value way.

I don't think there is anything glaringly wrong with me but, I still don't think she respects me in the appreciation since. She adores my attention and my presence but, we have the energy of friends. So, I think I need to spend more time leveraging the competition tactic for building S.V.

The tough part is that I am dealing with a woman who has made a series of statements within the past year that implies she is more willing to give me up than change.

She said something similar the other week before I dropped an S.V. competition story on her (I held that story in my head about a month before finally telling it. I thought the timing couldn't be better to test her statements about me finding someone else because she's not going to change - BTW, these statements aren't coming from topics about sex. I didn't want you to think I was using the old browbeat/logic conversations as a tactic).

I was surprised at how much the story impacted her but, I accidently screwed up and neutralized the story 10-15 minutes later.

I let her know she had nothing to worry about (I wasn't even thinking. I should have let the story simmer for a few days). Either way, to make a long story short, I do believe there is an S.V. problem even though I may not want to admit it.

Sometimes, it seems like things are getting better but I think those are moments of temporary S.V. So, I'm going to work on my S.V. through stories about competition and see if there is any improvement through this tactic first. As always, thanks for the advice. I save these emails so that I can always utilize them at some later date. I'll catch up with you in a month or two.

Best Regards,
"Mike"

Not a problem, "Mike".

I would agree 100% with your suggestion to leverage "competition-based" tactics - with an emphasis on getting her to "imagine" seeing you in a sexual desirable context. ESPECIALLY!!!!....if she currently doesn't like talking about sex...

Because if you at least had the ability to tell a sexual story (ie of last night's adventure) you could not only use that as a precursor to building ST for the next session but you're "imprinting" her mind with an image of you being a "Sexual Character"...(ideally, over and over and over again)

If  $E = M * C^2$ , then  $SE = SM * C^2$

Sexual Energy (Desire) = Sexual Mass (Sexual Character) * Speed of Light

...which is kind of a playful way of stating that "the woman MUST see you in a sexual way". Again, if she's reacting negatively to stories + she sees you as a friend, but you have base value, then the most efficient way to build sexual value is with 3rd party stories (stories about other woman seeing you as sexually desirable)

it's kind of like this true story I was reading about where there was a South America TV soap opera star who played a villain on the show... whenever he made public appearances, people boo'ed him and talked about how much they hated him...

which is silly, but it doesn't matter how smart/dumb/average you are, everyone's brain is programmed via "repetitive associations".

That's good news, because that reminds us that all habits can be changed. And if your wife currently has a habit of perceiving as a friend, you just need to flush it out with "repetitive associations" (ie. story after story after story of women seeing you as a sexual character).

At that point, you're only limited to 2 things:

Your "Ability to select the right story" and "Story skills".

Hey CR-

I recently divorced from a Woman I was Married to for 10 years (very sadly). She is a near-6-foot, drop-dead Spanish beauty. Problem is, Women are screwed-up in the head SOOO badly today with this "entitlement mentality" bullshit. She LOVED Sex with me, but played that "I'm going to withhold Sex just because I can" bullshit with me off-and-on for 4 YEARS of our Marriage (years 4-8). I knew just what to do...but it wasn't pretty. I ignored her, and made a Female friend on the Internet (this one a drop-dead, New York-borne Iraqi beauty!). I did nothing much to hide it, and when my Wife found out...good God!!! After we worked through the INITIAL hurt and evaluation of our Marriage...my Wife couldn't keep her hands out of my pants. She learned that, no matter how beautiful, I wasn't taking any of her bullshit. We made up for our first 8 years of Sexual "indifference" in 2!

Ultimately, she just couldn't let go of the anger, and sabotaged our Marriage...by having an affair of her own....on the Internet. (there were financial stressors as well). And, as soon as our Divorce was finalised...he dumped her, too.

I still miss her...but I would be willing to go celibate the REST of my Life, before I'll put up (wuss-bag style) with a Woman's bullshit (no matter HOW beautiful), and their entitlement nonsense.

I thought you might find this interesting.

Mark-John

Hey Mark.

Yes. Definitely. I find stories like this very interesting (more importantly, inspiring).

I'm happy for you!!

I'm glad you were able to snap out of it.

I knew a guy who was in a similar situation. Beautiful wife.

She started playing the "no sex game" (the collector's edition). And then he was caught talking sexually to his ex-girlfriend on facebook. His wife was crushed...sad for a few days .....after she came out of it, he said she was sexually attacking nonstop for a couple of weeks...

He said he never seen her so horny before! Ever!

I believe it was the first time in a long time that his wife saw him as a Sexual Character (sexually admired/desired by another woman).

Before, she treated him like a friend. Never wanted to have sex. And he aggressively refused to any "tactics" that I shared with him, because he didn't want to quote-unquote "manipulate her".

He wanted to be the super nice guy who never strategizes to get a woman horny - even though that's a losing game plan.

Of course, he didn't stick to his guns like you did, Mark

He did the one thing I warned him not to do...which is to go back to his "pussy-guy" mindset (catering to her sense of entitlement)...instead of unapologetically using/leveraging the experience to communicate a new set of standards and messages...

As a result, the "nympho-ness" rapidly faded and he landed head-first into the biggest sexual drought in their relationship... it was even worse than before.

It's always refreshing to hear stories like yours...

Take care Mark!

P.S. Telling sexy stories have been a hot topic and I think it has to do with a growing number of guys understanding how stories affect the mind. So I decided to have a talented young lady custom build some stories if you're interested.
